Excerpt: .with the lighter aspects of the examinations; College customs, such as the grace-cup; his dealings with his co-examiners, and marks of honour to himself which he knew would please her, though they were indifferent to him. And sometimes he falls into the deeper vein, which was never long absent from his communion with her, commenting on the portion of Scripture which he knew that she was reading, and passing on to general meditations on life and duty. In November 1868 his old teacher, James D. Forbes, had resigned the principalship of the United College in the University of St. Andrew s, and an effort was made by several of the professors1 to induce Maxwell to stand for the vacant post, which was in the gift of the Crown, and had been held by Brewster and 1 It is right that I should add that...
