Wheeler, U. S. Corps of Engineers: December 23, 1874, Before the American Geographical Society At this time the expedition headed by Lewis and Clarke was organized: , the former a nephew of, and military Secretary to, the President; the latter, an officer in the army. The inception of this work has not merely signaled the wonderful intuitive power that has been accredited to Jefferson, but shows at this early day the value attached to systematic Governmental support. With all the facilities at this time available, this, one of the most prominent expeditions of the first quarter of the 19th century, started out to pierce the northwestern interior. This was the first well authenticated and well equipped expedition that had for its mission an inquiry into the extent and resources, then comparatively unknown, of this great and almost continental area. It is true that at an earlier period, in our southwestern territory, the trips of the early Jesuit missionaries following the expedition for the conquest under Cortes, and later parties, sent out under the sanction of the government of New Spain, both inland and coast-wise, had their origin and results much in advance of the historical epochs of the colonial, state and territorial independencies of the government of the United States. But their results were comparatively of little avail in bringing to light facts and deductions susceptible of being drawn from these great areas. Dwelling with so much significance upon this individual effort in the threading of interior spaces has not been done with a view to pass encomium upon one more than any other expedition, upon one more than any...
